Professionals Address WCCS 8th Graders

At 7:30am on Thursday morning over 40 eighth graders gathered in their advisories to hear from New York City professionals working in a variety of different careers around the city. This breakfast was the first in a series that will eventually be available to all students at WCCS. The hope is to get students thinking about their futures, possible career options and help students see how their actions now relate to the future goal of going to college and being successful in the workplace.

Students in Thursday's sessions learned about life as a doctor, an editor, an art director, a fundraiser, a lawyer, a career planner, and more. They learned that hard work and reputation matter, that making connections now can help in the future and that internships and other volunteering opportunities can really make a difference in not only getting into college but also seeing if a particular career is a good fit.

We want to recognize those students who got up early and took a positive step toward their futures! We look forward to more career breakfasts and work visits in the future!
